What I said was a drama queen side to her....doesn't mean she is a complete one. And for the record, I can do more than imagine what it is like to both deal with and be someone who's been raped/molested. It is indeed an incredibly difficult thing to deal with. It does not mean however that others need to change to be able to deal with you. It means you need to find ways of healing yourself. It never completely goes away, but it can be overcome. I do not believe Simon is being made out to be a bad guy at all...just at a loss without the examples of how to deal with emotional things.

For the record, Simon is faced with a lifetime of cultural differences I think. Each of them has a childhood from which they need to recover.

I have a lot of faith in Simon and Kacie. I don't think Kacie's is manipulating Simon by crying. I taped the show and I noticed that some shots they show Kacie crying is a shot we have already seen the other day. (ex. when she was crying on the bed laying down) they make her seem like she is crying all the time because that show us the same seen over and over again. And how can she be manipulating Simon by crying when she is crying Simon does not change his behavior he stays the same. When someone is manipulating someone they do it to get their way. We see Kacie cry many times and Simon just sits there. I believe she is crying because she is hurting inside and is very emotional. I think Simon and Kacie are the realist couple on the show. They are telling their dark secrets. How can you even reply to Kacie's crying on this message board if you yourself have not been molested. I would be crying everyday if I had to come to the realization of being molested!

Simon wants it both ways. He wants Kaycie to be passionate sexually, yet he represses her in the daytime. Which is it, Mon? Do you want her to pretend to be your secret whore? I had boyfriends like that in my past, and it seemed to me that this was an unresolved problem within themselves. If you want me to be uninhibited in private, you're going to have to deal with my personality out in the open as well. Either you need to control what I wear, watch and say, or you like me. It can't be both.

PS on the molestation issue, it can be overcome. I was a victim of incest from age 3 to age 13 and for me, it comes out in my lack of patience for anyone who has an immature, Playboy-ish attitude toward women. I looked for a man who understands that you have to be respectful of someone all day long if you want her to be enthusiastic in your bed.

LOL It looks like I am talking to myself because we can't add on or edit messages.

Anyway, I just wanted to add that 3 times a day is out of the question. That's some kind of domination trip he's got going. Any man who thinks a woman can get passionate when she knows she's going to be there again in a couple hours, or was just there a couple hours ago, and no end in sight, has been reading too much Playboy. And any woman who says she can be passionate 3 times a day every day is either faking or psycho.

I can relate to what Kacie is going through. I was abused/molested as a child and my impression is that because of Iyanla and Rhonda's lack of clinical training they minimize her issues. One can recover from this sort of trauma, but you can't do it on command, and others do have to be patient with the survivor until they do recover if they truly accept her. I don't think she is manipulating by crying and I feel it was insensitive of Iyanla to say that she was. I noticed that when Simon cried in the same session Iyanla gave him a hug and validated his feelings, while kind of making Kacie the bad guy. I can see why she felt nobody was in her side. I think Kacie's problems are way out of the two life-coaches league and so they should not presume to put time-limits or "shoulds" on how soon she should get over it.

Really Dr. Stan should be the one working with her primarily since he has the training to deal with PTSD, which it's clear she has, much in the same way as Megg had her phobias which were so severe that the life-coaches did not make judgements because they seemed to know they lacked the expertise to comment on it.

This is very dangerous territory for non-professionals to muck around in. Encouraging alot of self-recrimination in someone with a history of that kind of repeated abuse and no stable and supportive parental figure is just asking for a crisis.
