
Jessica was honest and real today

Love how she got on Lisa for starting drama, her attitude. She got on Allison for telling TJ to make eye contact, Love how she stood up for TJ.

Hmm, maybe I misunderstood that part... I thought Jessica was chastising TJ for her reaction to Allison's comment.

TJ should have been able to look at Lisa and have conversation, not mumble while searching for the words while fidgeting and looking at her hands. Maybe that was Allison's way of trying to be an accountability partner..

The whole shabang confused me. I hope someone manages to get a good recap of the episode. I don't know how the whole blow up began and how Allison got bought into in the first place. I think Allison stayed out of it for the most part... until she suggested TJ trying to look at Lisa when she spoke with her. Eye contact is important when you are trying to speak to someone.

Loved it. About time somebody cracked the clique against TJ.

My thought too!!!!!! Finally, some real support among some of them!!!! It doesn't mean TJ is perfect, but the intent is heartfelt and Lisa was the OBVIOUS aggressive hypocrite.

I just read the recap... and I think Jessica was reprimanding TJ for how she spoke to ALLison.. Maybe Allison has just about had it with TJ'ism's... We all reach the point of aggravation and frustration... Hence why she said that to and about TJ...(being a b*).

Jessica did say something to about TJ's delivery but I think for the most part she was sticking up for TJ's side of things. I think she told TJ HOW she told Allison to mind her own business came out bitchy.

ya it was a confusing epi as so much was going on. i agree tj was fidgeting, and it must have been very frustrating (what the heck was she doing with that thing?), and also bc she was having so much trouble with her words: tj girl just spit it out (shes trying to be choose more carefully now bc llyana told her to watch the judgements in group last week when speaking to lisa). i think ally meant well, about the eye contact remark, but i dont think she needed to interrupt tj to say it-- and i really did not like to hear her say: "dont be a b*h to me!" and wag her finger. i just have a finger thing: no fingers! and i dont like bad language during a heated discussion, as i said somewhere else, i find that unnecessary and frankly: escalatory. for me i thought tj was just trying to communicate, but ally did 3 big no-nos: 1)she interrupted, 2)she wagged her finger at tj, 3) and then she said the "b*h" word. those are big no-nos in my opinion. and i did feel that although ally did not intend to come across as condescending and superior to tj, that she did in my opinion come off as some big expert on speaking, and thats not the way to speak to people either: i felt it was disrespectful and that ally knows better (tj came in with communication problems and needs some support and patience--how would ally like it if people siad to her, 'oh ally just get over cancer, whatever, and make sure you dont get on our nerves while working it all out'). ally does need to speak up for herself--i just wish that swearing, wagging her finger, being condescending, stalking off in a huff, and drinking wine werent her first choices. jess i think was trying to communicate with lisa and then mediate between ally and tj (and i heard her giving points for tj and ally), but ally had already stalked off in a huff with her glass of wine. what a nuthouse. i think i need a break. time to go for a walk or something.

Jessica was clear to say to Allison twice that although TJ said it in typical TJ-speak, it really was none of her business and didn't need to be in it. This time it was ALLISON who was being a life-coach but only wants people to get on TJ when she does it. Pot calling kettle black alert! And yes, TJ has a long way to go with communication...but I really like your comparison nif..... the hgs and LCs need to treat TJ and her issue with communication (that is well known) with compassion like Allison wants to be for having cancer and being a victim growing up. Allison is definitely showing a selfish streak in this area and Dr. Stan even called her on this. No I don't think Allison is a bad person in any way, shape or form. She's just not getting it or choosing to not get it yet. I truly hope she will. But Jessica was very well-spoken, honest, and strong today. Now that's a way to support but not coach!!

I have no clue what the arguement was about, who started it and who was wrong or right.... I did tape the episode, so if i have the head, perhaps I will watch that part again. TJ was talking to Lisa earlier and I couldnt hear cos Alison was preaching to Jill or something about a glass - too many people talking at the same time.

One thing that DID annoy me was Jessica sticking her oar in - I mean come on, was this whole thing really anything to do with her...somehow she always seems to put herself in the middle of the drama and is SO ANNOYING!

Bumping up for new feedback. Amazing how we still can see it in so many different ways.

Seeing the different viewpoints is really where I, personally, learn a lot from the show. I tend to get over tuned to my own opinion. This helps me realize that there are so many valid ways to view things.

I was impressed by how on target Jessica was in her communication and didn't over do it. I don't think that she should have interfered. (But gee, it seemed like everyone was interfering in other housemates business at some point in today's show!)
