
Important Guidelines

Posted by Tara - 2004/11/28 10:27

Correct Forum:

Posting in the correct forum is vital for a more direct response. Wrongly posted posts will be moved when possible, but may also be locked or deleted with or without warning by Moderators.

Announcements and Sticky Threads:

There are a number of announcements and sticky threads placed at the top of each forum. Please read them before posting. These threads contain valuable information and may answer your question.

Locking/Editing/Deleting Posts:

If your post has been locked, edited, or deleted there was a reason behind the change. If you choose to flame the Moderator for making a change to your post or thread, you may be warned or banned, depending on your posting history.

Your Account:

Do not let anyone else use your account. If more than one person uses the same computer, each person needs to have his or her own account. Do not register member name that contains profanity, obscene or sensitive terms. Also, do not include any profanity or other material not suited to the forum in your profile. This includes pornography, warez, mp3 or other illegal content.

Duplicate Registrations:

We have a very strict policy regarding individual users registering one and only one account on this forum. The reason for this is simple - a user with more than one account usually isn't up to anything very good. If a user is found to have registered more than one account, the last one registered will be terminated and the user will be warned. Any further attempts to register another alias will lead to a permanent ban. If a user is already banned when trying to register another account, that person will be banned for life and will have their actions reported to their ISP.

Punishments (Warnings and Bans):

If any user does not follow the policies we've outlined, action will have to be taken by either the Moderators or the Administrators. The first step will be a warning. A warning (which will include the reason for the warning) may be a reply in the offending thread, an email to the user or a private message to the user. If after the warning there is another problem, a ban will have to be enforced. If you try to circumvent the ban, your actions will be reported to your ISP. If you choose to register a new alias after being banned, you will be banned again and your actions will be reported to your ISP. If you post on behalf of someone who has been banned, you will receive a warning. If you continue posting for a banned member after being warned, you will be banned as well. Before any ban is enforced, more than 1 Moderator will review it.

Thank you for reading our policies.

Policies are subject to change by Moderators and Administrators as deemed necessary. The moderators may ban anyone for any reason they see fit.

=====

Re:Important Guidelines

Posted by dbmcmommy - 2005/12/31 00:10

Due to recent happenings on the site I wanted to bring this site guideline up so everyone can re-read this policy.

=====