
star jones not on the view

Posted by stardiva - 2006/06/28 12:33

god that was Quick.

not to be mean but i never did like her.

and does any one think it had to do with Rosie coming on??

and i have the perfect replacement

Mario cantone!!!

hey star it's been swell but the swellings gone down.

I for one wasn't sad to see her go!

she is too diva for her own good!

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by Tara - 2006/06/28 12:51

I really think ABC made a huge mistake by not asking Star Jones back. I didn't see yesterday's show and was suprised at the announcement this morning on The View.

I really think Star Jones was very entertaining to watch on The View too. They better get somebody in there quick. With Merideth and Star gone it's going to get really boring.

I'm not too excited about Rosie coming in the fall either.

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/06/28 13:15

I was surprised by the sudden departure too.

I don't think Elisabeth and Rosie will hit it off either... if last weeks skirmish with Sandra Bernhard is any indication. I just think they may be too politically opposite.

I liked Star on the set but I heard she was a bit too much of a diva... Maybe there was more to the sudden departure. (Marital issues getting a bit too public..) Maybe she wanted out!

I didn't see Friday's show where Star and Elisabeth both had words with the guest comedienne.. but found out about it on the web last night after trying to find out what I glimpsed about Star on yesterday's show via tvguide programming highlights last night. I guess they made an announcement of some kind yesterday, but I didn't know what..and nothing was listed on the View's main website. Today I tuned in a few minutes into the show only to see the 3 of them.

Probably the beginning of the end for The View... I can't believe they thought Rosie was going to round out the panel...!

Let's ask Barbara to back Starting Over! :P :P

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/06/28 13:23

Here is a yahoo entertainment piece about the sudden departure.

I guess they knew they weren't renewing her contract... Star knew and had time to job hunt.. Anyway..here's the scoop... on how it really went down Tuesday and today.

http://hosted.ap.org/dynamic/stories/T/TV_THE_VIEW_REYNOLDS?SITE=ORROS&SECTION=HOME&TEMPLATE=DEFAULT

Looks like it's hot off the press... Time I'm viewing it, it's only a little more than an hour off the press (AP)...

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by amberlynSH - 2006/06/28 13:31

I read that Star was supposed to announce her leaving on Thursday and then she shocked everyone by doing it yesterday.... read that Barbara Walters felt very upset at Star doing it that way and with an interview she gave to some magazine about Rosie and the View....

I think it was cnn.com I read it at yesterday that Star knew she wouldn't be back well before Rosie was hired.... and that viewers weren't happy with Star after the very gimme gimme gimme wedding she had.... they said that ratings dropped during and after that....

Barbara Walters wanted Star to handle the announcement a certain way and she would have been able to say whatever she wanted.... I think Star decided she was gonna do whatever she wanted her way.... and unfortunately for her, it is Barbara's baby (show)....

personally, I have never been a big Star Jones fan.... she talks so much about the weight loss, but doesn't acknowledge having bypass surgery for the help.... she could have used her position as a platform for good...but instead, she tried to make the weight loss look too easy... and for those that know just how difficult it is, it just leaves a bad impression to me....

the quote from cnn.com today was: "It is becoming uncomfortable for us to pretend that everything is the same at this table," show creator Walters. "Therefore, regrettably, Star will no longer be on this program."

ABC had decided against renewing Reynolds' contract months ago and the show was planning to let Reynolds announce it later this week, according to Walters. Reynolds could say whatever she wanted to about why she was leaving, "and we would back her up," the longtime ABC newswoman said.

Instead, Walters said she felt blindsided when Reynolds broke the news Tuesday, then was quoted in People magazine as saying she felt like she was fired.

"We gave her time to look for another job and hoped that she would announce it on this program and leave with dignity," Walters said. "But Star made another choice."

personally, Barbara Walters is so respected and highly revered, and there is so little negative out about her and her years and years of journalism, that I tend to believe her over Star.....

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/06/28 13:44

You summed up what was in the article link I provided really well.

I also would tend to side with Barbara over this. I think it was Star's way of getting revenge..

Wouldn't it have been interesting to be a fly on the wall after yesterday's show...? (After Star exerted her independence over what was supposed to happen?) I bet Barbara really let her have it and the decision was made then to let her go 'early'!

This ain't gonna bode well for Star's career...

Instead of leaving with dignity.... she's dug an even bigger hole for herself!

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by amberlynSH - 2006/06/28 13:57

I agree Kpw, that it was Star's way of getting her revenge and thinking she was gonna come out the other side looking like the wronged one... but in the end, she didn't leave with dignity and she did dig herself one heck of a hole when she burned that bridge... I don't think I'd be burning a bridge with Barbara Walters... and I don't see other tv shows jumping all over themselves to get Star now.... and she is supposed to do a larry king interview tomorrow night I think.... I see that hole getting deeper and her popularity going down even more after that interview...

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by Debby - 2006/06/28 17:49

I didn't realize that the decision to let Star go was made before the decision was made to bring Rosie aboard. I thought the reported conflict between Rosie and Star was because Rosie questioned Star's decision to hide her bypass surgery. It looks like The View was actually just not keen on keeping Star around. I can see why.

I think Star has just grown too temperamental. She used to be my favorite on the show, but she changed after her surgery or it could be that marriage changed her. Now days she seems to look down her nose at some of the guests or stare down at the floor if she is disagreeing with them. It turns me off. Star used to be very vocal about her opinions and would be very blunt in telling them, but, it doesn't come across the same way.

I also respect Barbara and I have not heard all the details, but, what's the difference in announcing your departure on Tuesday as opposed to Thursday? Why was that so important?

You know what they say, "There is no such thing as bad publicity." Besides, Star can always go back into law.

Wonder if Iyanla could fill Star's shoes. I think Iyanla may be over qualified.

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by MichaelAnthony - 2006/06/29 10:52

Debby wrote:

I also respect Barbara and I have not heard all the details, but, what's the difference in announcing your departure on Tuesday as opposed to Thursday? Why was that so important?

i believe from a production standpoint, it makes more sense to announce on a thursday so that friday can be your last day and bring closure to the week... if you announce early in the week, that big of news overshadows all your other topics for the week... it ends up drawing more attention to Star as every guest who comes on will spend X amount of time during their segment to give their well wishes or discuss Star's situation... Also, from what I can tell from all the press on this situation, there may have been issues with the tact that Star approached her leaving... Kinda like that whole, don't burn your bridges... Like quitting because you hate your boss, but in your exit interview, you cite personal advancement because you never know if that boss becomes your one of your next interviews elsewhere down the line or if you ever want to come back to the company under a new boss... Hope that makes sense... I haven't had breakfast yet, so I may not be completely awake...

sorry for the long post... my fingers just won't stop typing... hahah...

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by Debby - 2006/06/29 11:21

I can certainly understand that not burning bridges is the smart thing to do when leaving a job, however, I am on Star's side in this matter. It seems as if Barbara Walters expected Star to play along with the facade that Star was just leaving to pursue other career options and not let the viewers know that her contract was not renewed. Why does Star owe the show that lie?

I thought the departure speech Star gave on Tuesday was fair and respectful. She didn't put down the show and she didn't even indicate that it was not her choice to leave. For Barbara to overreact and tell her not to bother coming back to finish out her contract, IMO is a control issue. It's like, you didn't jump when I said jump so I'm done with you. Too much DRAMA.

Everyone sat at the table since April knowing that Star was not coming back, and dealt with it, but, after Star announces she is leaving, they can't suck it up and sit there for 2 more weeks! Please..... that's not reasonable.

A representative for TV Guide has said twice since yesterday that Barbara admits that she has been lying to the viewers for months about this matter. I guess she was hoping Star would be a good little girl and go away quietly, allowing the view to look good and hide the fact they kicked Star to the curb.

Anyway, this just hit me the wrong way, and polls indicate that Star is actually coming out on the top in this thing. Good.

If you'll notice from my post yesterday, I am not a Star fan anymore. I think it was time for her to get back to her old demeanor or hit the road, BUT, The View got it wrong on their tactics. I don't think the only way to exit a job with dignity is to kiss butt.

I hope Star does well tonight on Larry King and doesn't make me look stupid with this post in her support.

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/06/29 13:43

Debby wrote:

I can certainly understand that not burning bridges is the smart thing to do when leaving a job, however, I am on Star's side in this matter. It seems as if Barbara Walters expected Star to play along with the facade that Star was just leaving to pursue other career options and not let the viewers know that her contract was not renewed. Why does Star owe the show that lie?

I thought the departure speech Star gave on Tuesday was fair and respectful. She didn't put down the show and she didn't even indicate that it was not her choice to leave. For Barbara to overreact and tell her not to bother coming back to finish out her contract, IMO is a control issue. It's like, you didn't jump when I said jump so I'm done with you. Too much DRAMA.

Everyone sat at the table since April knowing that Star was not coming back, and dealt with it, but, after Star announces she is leaving, they can't suck it up and sit there for 2 more weeks! Please..... that's not reasonable.

A representative for TV Guide has said twice since yesterday that Barbara admits that she has been lying to the viewers for months about this matter. I guess she was hoping Star would be a good little girl and go away quietly, allowing the view to look good and hide the fact they kicked Star to the curb.

Anyway, this just hit me the wrong way, and polls indicate that Star is actually coming out on the top in this thing. Good.

If you'll notice from my post yesterday, I am not a Star fan anymore. I think it was time for her to get back to her old demeanor or hit the road, BUT, The View got it wrong on their tactics. I don't think the only way to exit a job with dignity is to kiss butt.

I hope Star does well tonight on Larry King and doesn't make me look stupid with this post in her support.

I didn't hear what Star said on Tuesday... but I do understand that news like that can throw off the rest of the planned interviews and guests and whatnot. Plus distract the audience into a different direction. Apparently this had been in the works for some time. I know Star has alot of other issues going on in her personal life (according to rumors) and I know that 'divaship' is one of the problems they've had with her. Not sure to what degree.. and if this is a control issue... on either Star or Barbara's part.. It could be one of those grey areas... Barbara and the show should have some say on the issue. But I am glad that Star didn't totally make an idiot of herself on Tuesday's show. Too bad I didnt see it all. I saw the first couple minutes and then the interview with the sperm donor doctor... but I missed Star's announcement. I kept thinking about Joy's ugly belt! ha,ha

Anyway, I might try to catch Larry King tonight.. Should be interesting to hear Star's version of the situation and why if it was already planned to do something later in the week did she do what she did in spite of the standing plan.

I do think MichaelAnthony made some valid points as well from a production standpoint.

Hindsight is always 20/20... and I'm sure both woman wished they'd handled things differently. I really thought they had a respectful professional relationship. Should be an interesting interview... I hope Star is able to regroup and respond graciously and with dignity rather than speak from an angry and hurt heart.

I wonder what new tidbits are floating out there from the Tuesday blowup. I was shocked at how quickly the entire The View website was updated to reflect the change. I noticed today that they had a guest cohost on.. Probably trying her out as a replacement.

Is there 2 more weeks to the season? Or was this going to be Star's last week anyway.. ? I can't imagine any of this boding well for the show with Rosie coming on board this fall. Unless all the other woman (Joy and Elisabeth) shared Barbara's feelings about how it happened. It would be hard not have feelings on the matter with people on both sides of you who you've worked with so closedly for so long. Either they are going to sympathize with one or the other... It would be hard to be neutral.. and can affect the morale of the rest of the cast.

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by Debby - 2006/06/29 16:40

If my memory serves me correctly, onm Tuesday Star said she was going to be there until mid July. She said that the show was moving in a different direction and that she would be leaving. After her speech, I had no idea the show had not picked her up again. She didn't seem ticked off or angry. She said that she had made the decision after much prayer and counsel. So I guess she okayed with God and her attorney. She was gracious to Barbara and the other hosts. Everything seemed fine.

I suspect that the show was planning to have Barbara make the announcement and present the leave the way she wanted it to appear. I'm not sure how she could have done a better and more gracious announcement than Star did on Tuesday.

Barbara has been on everyday filling in for Meredith and she's been doing a great job. She's going to be exhausted by the time Rosie arrives on board. She's only used to coming on the show a couple of times per week.

I think they will now have to get Rosie's approval for Rosie's replacement. I heard that Rosie's lowest ratings were higher than The Views ratings have ever been.

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by Debby - 2006/06/29 16:42

KPW, what personal problems of Star are you referring to in your earlier post?

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/06/29 17:00

rumors of marital issues.

There were rumors about her husband even before they married.

Only she and her husband know the truth and perhaps those closest to them.

I hope for her sake she's not having to deal with personal issues on top of professional ones. But sometimes one can affect the other.. I think time will tell. I'd hate to think after such a lavish wedding and all the hype that she doesn't wind up humiliated.

From your description of the speech on Tuesday.. I don't know what went wrong. Maybe it was the principle with Barbara.. I hadn't done any searches to see what else is floating out there as far as what happened on Tuesday... I'm sure the majority of the info will come out or a good impression of what happened tonight on LK. Maybe Barbara will call in... with her side..and they'll iron everything out.

I have a feeling that Star presents one thing publicly and another in private. Might go hand in hand with why the show is tired of her diva behavior and their desire for a change.

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/06/29 17:03

KPW1956 wrote:
rumors of marital issues.

I'd hate to think after such a lavish wedding and all the hype that she doesn't wind up humiliated.

ugh... I meant to say that I hope she doesn't wind up feeling humiliated if the marriage does wind up failing so soon after all the hype and huge wedding.

Wanted to clarify... I don't want to sound like a meanie!

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by amberlynSH - 2006/06/29 17:14

I think what I've read and heard 'gossip wise' is that her marriage is in trouble.... I think I even read that her husband is supposedly gay (don't hold me to that I can't find where I think I read it)... there's been a lot of talk of her being just too big for her britches as in a major diva attitude all around.... I think it's been said that she and Joy don't get along or like each other much... .there's been tons and tons of flack over her weight loss and claiming it's been all exercise and diet....and her refusal to discuss the bypass and plastic surgery she has had... and you can tell by pics of her that she's had plastic surgery... those wings under your arms don't vanish in a month after a big weight loss (she's just lucky she didn't end up like Christie with the scars) ... and a lot of people were turned off by her very commercial gimmegimmegimme wedding....

and personally, I think the problem (besides the production of the show) with announcing it earlier than planned was her way of 'one upping' Barbara.... Odds are she would have gotten the big send off like Meredith had, but she must have decided she didn't care enough to stay around for that... I think it was the wrong was to handle things and in life you just don't go around burning your bridges... especially with someone like Barbara Walters.... we're not talking just 'some' boss or just 'some' reporter... it's Barbara Walters.... that's a pretty important and helpful bridge to burn...

granted, I have a huge amount of respect for Barbara compared to what was only a fair amount for Star Jones.... and that respect has tumbled down to very little after this....

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/06/29 17:15

KPW1956 wrote:
rumors of marital issues.

I'd hate to think after such a lavish wedding and all the hype that she doesn't wind up humiliated.

ugh... I meant to say that I hope she doesn't wind up feeling humiliated if the marriage does wind up failing so soon after all the hype and huge wedding.

Wanted to clarify... I don't want to sound like a meanie!

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/06/29 17:19

Never go back through your back button to get back to a site.. If the page comes up saying... time expired..hit refresh... Don't.... or you might likely wind up with wierd duplicate posts!

I've done it twice in the last day or so.. Maybe both in this thread????!

Not meaning to be redundant.. just a goof...

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by jhal - 2006/06/29 17:37

At the risk of being booted....I was never a fan of The View. I absolutely hated Joy Behar (sp??). As for Star...from the beginning I thought she was a diva (fat or not). I guess now she's a thin diva. Never crazy about her either. The only one I liked was Meredith but I really didn't watch the show at all, just skipped by it as soon as I could.

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/06/29 17:53

No boos here... Understand.. The personality variety had to be something people either liked or hated. Myself.. nothing much else was on at that time.. and I did like Meredith and Elisabeth.. and up until recently, Barbara was on once or twice a week..

I'd watch depending if they had an interesting guest or not..

Meredith really was great as team captain. I just don't think it will ever be the same once she leaves.

I only started catching the show occasionally at times once Elisabeth joined the panel. Definitely not a diehard fan of the show.. bits and pieces here and there.. As you can tell, I missed the fanfare on Tuesday and top of Wed. show.. I went to lunch today and of course missed it.

I'm just interested in how this public bruhaha went down with such professional and supposedly dignified women. Maybe this is a mountain being made out of a molehill and it's a battle of the 'egos'.

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by Debby - 2006/06/30 11:38

Whew!!! I'm glad the Larry King show went so well. Star was great. Now I know why over the last couple of months Star has not been herself. I thought she was acting odd. She knew she had been let go and had to act as if everything was the same. That must have been tough on her. Looking back, I guess I was too tough on her. I didn't know what she was dealing with. I hope those marital problem rumors are untrue. How painful it would be should that rumor be true???

IMO Star came out on top last night. (She was also on The Today Show this morning) She showed class and integrity despite everything that happened.

Even if we take the version of events from ABC, The View and Barbara, they all still come out looking bad. They admit they expected Star to leave the show with the appearance that it was her own decision and not that she was let go by virtue of them not renewing her contract. They call that sham, "Star leaving with dignity." In actuality, it was Star leaving in a way that didn't make The View look bad that was the goal of Barbara and ABC. I suspect that's why Star said farewell on Tuesday. She didn't want to sit on the the show on Thursday and hear all the fake praise and misrepresentation of why she was leaving. ABC wanted a cover up of why Star was going her separate way. I just don't think Star was required to go along with that cover up.

Is the fact that Star told the truth a betrayal? I don't think so.
If Star had gone along with the lie, you know it would have been leaked sooner or later, and then it would look like Star lied about why she left. And of course then the network would look fine, they could blame Star for hiding the real reason she left. It seems to me Star had no real choice to do anything but what she did.

Star said this moring that Elisabeth had called her and she really appreciated her support. Elisabeth and Joy better take notes. If that show pulled this stuff once, they will do it again. I wonder if the remaining ladies may be thinking that it's time to move on. I don't think I would ever feel secure in their postions after seeing this fallout.

I really like Rosie, so I'll be glad when she gets to The View. I give her and Barbara 2 months before they run head on into a major fight and it hits the fan. Just my prediction.

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/06/30 11:46

I started another thread re: the larry King Show..

I can really see both sides...but also with Star really putting her spin control on things..

I had a different take on last nights show. I would have liked to see what she said on this mornings show.

I'm glad that Elisabeth called her. They (Joy and Elisabeth) should not have to be put in the middle of anything. This was a big unfortunate and needless mess.

I do see Star's point in some things.. but she is enjoying playing the victim a little too much.

She apparently said she was already working on another tv project... All this publicity will help and not hurt that..

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by startovernut - 2006/07/12 05:01

I am beginning not to like Elisabeth, either. She is very opinionated, and almost rude. Did any one see yesterday how she "attacked" the guest host for not being married after being together with her boyfriend for 15 years. I know the show is THE VIEW and that is what drives the show...the differing views of the hosts, but....well, just my opinion(my VIEW as it were!)

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by startovernut - 2006/07/12 05:03

the guest host..I forgot to mention...was Kelly Monaco from Dancing with the Stars, and General Hospital.

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by startovernut - 2006/07/12 05:06

the guest host..I forgot to mention...was Kelly Monaco from Dancing with the Stars, and General Hospital.

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by 2cents - 2006/07/12 08:51

I was never a fan of Star Jones.....but I did see her on Larry King and saw her perspective.They told her she could tell a story (and you know the truth would eventually come out) and that she could bow out her way....and she did.She wanted a bit of control on how she left the show.I am sure it had been quite uncomfortable for her for quite awhile.She also talked about her wedding and that she would have done things differently...and about her weight loss.

Not re-newing a contract is being fired.

Anyway.....you are right,KPW, the publicity is great for everyone....including The View.I never watched it that much but tuned into see what was going on.

Pretty funny the segment they played the day aftyer (pre-taped show) about working for a female boss:huh:

Did you see the expressions on Star's face!?!?:lol:

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/07/12 09:26

2cents wrote:

I was never a fan of Star Jones.....but I did see her on Larry King and saw her perspective.They told her she could tell a story (and you know the truth would eventually come out) and that she could bow out her way....and she did.She wanted a bit of control on how she left the show.I am sure it had been quite uncomfortable for her for quite awhile.She also talked about her wedding and that she would have done things differently...and about her weight loss.

Not re-newing a contract is being fired.

Anyway.....you are right,KPW, the publicity is great for everyone....including The View.I never watched it that much but tuned into see what was going on.

Pretty funny the segment they played the day aftyer (pre-taped show) about working for a female boss:huh:

Did you see the expressions on Star's face!?!?:lol:

No I didn't see the day after... Wish I woulda... I'm a semi regular view watcher... But I'm like you... I could see both sides... I don't think the show would have said lie... but encourage her to exit gracefully if she wanted..by lining something else up, formally stepping down to pursue other things... whatever. I didn't think what she said was inherently bad on that particular Tuesday..and that they might have been able to live with her announcement 2 days earlier.. But when People Magazine made public her side before she'd even left the show (mind you, before that day was even up!).. that didn't sit well with the management, including Barbara.. (since obviously they weren't in the loop...and didn't know about that interview which was obviously was done to make the show look bad..)

I noticed a couple magazines at the checkout last night with new articles? The new People magazine and another celebrity type mag.. Anybody get them and any new info? I caught a tiny bit of her New York House Hunter gig last night. I watched one segment of her.. and wasn't anything to 'shine' about. One article I saw online said that gig was lined up before she left the show.. Maybe she is trying on different things for size... This online article speculates other possible job prospects for her..

<http://www.foxnews.com/story/0,2933,203054,00.html>

The smoke is clearing... It all seemed rather unnecessary! I think she was a integral part of the show these last 9 seasons..and they were trying to handle the situation delicately.. They were even planning a big send off.. As I mentioned before, I just think she may have found out that the People 'piece' was coming out sooner than she realized and she had to move up her announcement as well. If they had already mutually agreed to say something on Thursday, Star really should have honored that though. I guess the mess would have been even moreso, had she not said anything and the People article show up prior to an announcement.

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by LaurenB - 2006/07/12 10:36

Actually Starr told Larry King that she gave the interview to "People" magazine, knowing that her announcement would be made that week. Starr was planning ahead.

I watched the Larry King show and I found Starr to be very "contrived". How many times did she say regarding herself, "That's not who I am, I was not raised like that"?

I say, Starr grow up, your contract was not renewed, your "Diva Ways" were incredibly annoying, learn from this experience and move on with grace!

As for the comments regarding Starr being told to "Lie" about her departure. I think this has been distorted by Starr, in order for her to gain back some credibility. It did not fly with me. There was and is no reason for anyone to go into all the details of her contract and why it was not renewed. Starr could have simply said that it had been a good run and that she was exploring new opportunities. This would not have been a lie. IMO, Starr wants to play "The Victim Diva". I just don't buy it!

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by Debby - 2006/07/13 13:04

LaurenB wrote:

IMO, Starr wants to play "The Victim Diva". I just don't buy it!

I do buy Star's version and I didn't even like Star when all of this happened. Come on, why does NBC and Barbara really want to help Star out? What incentive would they have to do that? It's business, remember? They are looking out for number 1. Why blame Star for doing the same thing?

I think Star handled the situation much better than NBC and Barbara. Speaking of Barbara, are you watching that show now? She is desperate to create scandal on the Hot Topics portion. Every day she is bringing up outrageous sex stories that usually include celebs. She's throwing names around like crazy. It's really surprisng. Don't get me wrong, I love that kind of thing. It's just surprising coming from Barbara. Boy, has she loosened up.

And I do agree with the poster who said Elisabeth was getting on their last nerve. She is out of control! It appears she is getting paid to look like an idiot. How naive can you get?

I don't think I've ever seen anyone so insecure about herself. To think of her poor husband..... She was adamant yesterday that HER husband didn't like Playgirl magazine or any erotic photos or movies. She swore that Tim would never even look at something like that. Even if he were in the team's locker room and someone else had a nude photo, her husband wouldn't look. (He is a professional athlete) She says that's just the way he is and she is POSITIVE about that. She said it was wrong and a personal insult for a married man to look at a photo of a naked woman, because he is comparing the model to his real wife who probably doesn't look as attractive. She got very animated about this topic.

She also gets very animated about people who chose to stay in long term reallionships and not get married. She thinks it's her way or the highway. I'm really surprised this girl is so small minded. I think you can be a conservative and express your viewpoint, without coming across as narrow minded and naive.

So far, I like the Asian guest host who hadn't eaten in 10 days. She was really funny and seemed to be relaxed on the show or maybe she was just weak from starvation.

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by LaurenB - 2006/07/13 22:35

I agree regarding, Elizabeth, she has gotten on my last nerve since shortly after she arrived on the show. Her unwavering view points on Bush along with her "puritanical" view points drive me nuts!

Actually I also enjoyed Karie Acanaba (sp) as a guest host, but even more so, I enjoyed Debra Roberts today. I think that she would be an excellent "Bridge" host. She owns great credibility with a sense of wit and humor, as did Meredith. I am an avid watcher of "The View". I have great respect for BW and I would like to see this show succeed. There is so little TV of any value on daytime.

=====

Re:star jones not on the view

Posted by Debby - 2006/07/14 12:30

I agree Lauren. I hope the show continues to do well. I think the scandal gave the show a little bump up in the ratings, but they must sustain it. They are banking on Rosie to help them out when she comes aboard.

I think that Elisabeth will look back on her behavior in 10 years and be mortified. Most mature people know that you can't make broad statements about what others will or will not do. She is very adamant that her husband has not and will not ever cheat on her. I think we saw Kathie Lee suffer the humiliation in a public way when her beloved husband was caught cheating redhanded. (I felt for her and really liked Kathie Lee) When you build yourself up to be above reproach, and then you or your spouse falls, it can be devastating, especially if you must face the public on your job everyday.

That's why I am so surprised that Elisabeth continues her rantings. Why doesn't her mother or friend sit her down and give her some words of wisdom, such as "Calm yourself down. What would you tell the public if your husband suddenly leaves you for another woman who he first saw modeling in the nude?(She also claims he doesn't look at photos of any nude women)
She apparently has never had to eat crow.

Although she is the president of the George Bush fan club, she does not espouse the supposed Republican belief that less government is better. Elisabeth is in favor of the federal government banning or regulating almost everything. The is what the Democrats are typically accused of doing. She believes the entire country should be tightly controlled to ensure they do things the way she does them, which is the right way. I guess it's just immaturity that makes her that way. The truth is, I liked her when she was on Survivor.

I still like Barbara, but, didn't you think it was odd the way she tried to get Al Roker's wife to discuss their sex life or in the alternative, to diss him as a wuss?(sp) It was entertaining, but if I were Al, I wouldn't be too happy with what was said.

=====