
Lisa\'s story when she entered the house

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/07/23 07:30

I happened on this while looking for Jessica's (to double check where her family was from)...

Reading this.. you get a sense of what Lisa's thought processes are.

If her parents were on vacation for 4 months.. I'm sure they aren't emotionally dependent on her... But rather she's dependant on them!

We know she used the credit cards for emergencies and her idea of emergencies were travel, hotel and rental cars.. So it's not like she was a slave to be at her parents beck and call. They probably bought her the condo to get her out of their home!

=====

Re:Lisa\'s story when she entered the house

Posted by KPW1956 - 2006/07/23 07:31

Oops.. forgot the link to the recap.

http://www.startingovertalk.com/index.php?option=com_joomlaboard&Itemid=99&func=view&id=27727&catid=74

If link doesn't work, it's October 10th. (i think...:S)

=====

Re:Lisa\'s story when she entered the house

Posted by ymimad - 2006/07/27 12:03

hmmm yes i wondered about that, her parents didnt seem dependant on her at all, but she is on them for sure. she has never grown up. they created a monster by giving her too much and not requiring anything of her. but way too much has been said about Lisa feeling she has to take care of them and even that she has to keep them alive, I dont think thats true at all.

when parents spoil children, they actually make them unable to care for themselves. I have seen it in my own family. one relative totally spoiled his 3 kids and guess what, all 3 of them are over 30 and still live at home and OFF mom and dad who STILL support them. they are emotionally crippled and useless adults who will not survive when mom and dad are gone. Llsa reminds me of them although they actually are much nicer people than Lisa is. Lisa can be really nasty.

=====