Not sure if I spelled his last name right.

But I've stumbled on a preview of his show.. It almost looks like a whole show.. They are indicating on the screen that it is coming next week though..

His show opened almost like a monologue.. I think he is part comedien.. and remind me alot of Kramer from Seinfeld.

Dealing with couples issues.

He's definitely different!

I'm planning to catch his show.

He wrote two books that I'm aware of... He's Just Not That Into You... and something about divorce or breaking up...

I saw him on Oprah, The View and one of the morning news shows... he tells it like it is... with humor.

He offered the studio audience copies of his new book.

Something about "It's called a break up, because it's broken!" (... the smart girls break up buddy.)

He IS funny!! I don't know that I'll watch too often.....but he delivers good info in a very upbeat and palatable way! I did enjoy the show about the break-ups!!! Especially his own story about a former girlfriend with the pet goldfish!!! :woohoo:

I keep forgetting to check out this show... it's on at the same time as Oprah in my area.

Has anyone watched this show?

I saw the show. I liked it. Most interesting to me is how much these guys would like to be more pleasing to women. They just don't know how. It's cool that they have a real guy to talk to them like real guys. He's more interesting than a retired Victoria's Secret model, anyway.

The guy is starting to grow on me. He still reminds me of Kramer! he seems nervous a bit yet... but I see him as the most promising newcomer in the daytime circuit!

Today's show was about kid problems..and he had Nanny Deb on (I think that is her name)... He admitted he's not a professional.. duh.... But I wonder about him approaching so many varying topics since he's primarily a comedien rather than a pschologist or specialist.. I think alot of things are common sense... that's how Ann Landers got her start! and of course her sister who followed!

I might start watching him a bit more regularly. I enjoyed todays show...
